There is an old story about a man called Androcles. He was a Greek slave owned by his master. One day, he escaped and hid in a forest. He was tired and hungry and feeling very sad. Suddenly, he heard the sound of a lion roaring. Androcles tried to run away but tripped and fell over the root of a tree. The lion was quickly upon him. To Androcles' surprise, however, it did not want to eat him. The lion was roaring because it was in pain. Androcles saw that one of its feet was covered in blood. There was a large, sharp thorn stuck in the creature's paw. He gently pulled the thorn out, and the grateful lion licked his face.

Some time later, Androcles was found by Roman soldiers. They took him back to his town, where he was told he would be put to death for running away from his master. A common Roman punishment for criminals was to be fed to wild beasts while the public watched for fun. Soon it was Androcles' turn to be killed. But the lion that the Romans set on him was the same one he had helped. To everyone's amazement, it licked his face instead of attacking him. When the Roman emperor heard what had happened, he was very touched and allowed both Androcles and the lion to go free.

Everyone deserves to feel safe on Chatterbox, and it's important that we help people who experience bullying and harassment online. Today, we're introducing new tools so people can better control unwanted, negative or hurtful experiences on Chatterbox.

We are giving you more control over how people interact with your posts on Chatterbox because comments can sometimes be used to bully or harass people. We're introducing a way for people to hide or delete many comments at once from the options menu. This feature can now be used on Android and will be available on iOS in the coming months. We are also testing ways to more easily search for and block offensive words from appearing in comments.

Being the target of unwanted attention can be stressful and some people may not feel comfortable reporting a bully or harasser. In other cases, bullying or harassment happens out of sight from victims. If you see a friend or family member being bullied or harassed, now you can report someone on their behalf via the menu above the post that you are concerned about. Once reported, our anti-bullying team will review the post, keep your report anonymous, decide whether it is against our anti-bullying standards and remove it if necessary.

We hope the additional steps we're taking will help people who face bullying and harassment on Chatterbox. We know our job is never done when it comes to keeping people safe, and we'll continue listening to feedback on how we can build better tools and improve our policies.

A few years ago, France was called “a nation of writers” when it was found that 17 percent of the population had written a book or a story. Most of them have not been published, though. In 2015, someone got an idea for making more of this writing available to the public. They decided to use vending machines.

SNCF, France’s national train company, installed the vending machines at railroad stations. The machines print unique short stories for passengers to enjoy. What’s more, they can be read for free. The machines have buttons with numbers on them. Passengers can choose whether they want their story to take one, three, or five minutes to read, then look through the list. The chosen item is printed out on a long piece of paper that looks like a receipt. The paper can easily be recycled, so there is no waste and the machines are environmentally friendly.

More than 5,000 authors, whose names are not given, have sent in stories to be included on the list. There are also classic stories by famous writers, as well as poems and fairy tales. The publishing company that thought of the idea felt that many people would like to read from a piece of paper than a smartphone screen. So far, it seems they were right.

47. What is the main idea of the passage?

- (A) There are many writers in France.
- (B) SNCF installed vending machines at railroad stations.
- (C) There is a way to make more writing available to the public.
- (D) Paper can be recycled easily and the vending machines are everywhere.

48. According to the passage, which of the following is NOT true about the vending machines?

- (A) They are environmentally friendly. (B) They provide free reading.
- (C) There are buttons with numbers on the machines. (D) They can print complete books.

第 49 題至第 50 題為題組

Are you worried that your Instagram photos won't get any likes? Then you're in luck, as long as you're walking through a mall in Moscow. Vending machines there sell 100 Instagram likes for as little as 50 Russian rubles (88 cents), or 100 followers for 100 rubles ($1.75). The machines belong to a company called Snatap. The company says that the likes come from real people who use accounts they've created.

The first like machine appeared in St. Petersburg in November 2016. The business later spread to Moscow and other cities. Installing one of the machines in a mall costs 420,000 rubles ($7372). The key part is not the machine itself but the software it uses — which can be bought from Snatap for just over $300 plus five percent of the monthly profit. Now there are about 20 vending machines selling likes all over Russia.

These vending machines aren't the first time Russia has surprised the world with new technology. For instance, people have recently been shocked by a new service offering Instagrammable flowers for rent. These flowers can make it seem like you have someone in your life who will buy you gifts. As the description explains, "This bouquet can be yours to take a beautiful photo! Become a topic of discussion for your friends and make your ex jealous. You can add a BMW car and a handsome man to your order for an extra 500 rubles."

Reactions ranged from surprise to laughter, with many others picking up on the sadness of modern life. They say people are putting too much money and effort into maintaining an online image. The aim is to give anyone looking a serious case of envy because your life is so good.

49. How much should you put in the vending machine if you want to buy 500 followers and 500 Instagram likes?

- (A) 250 rubles. (B) 500 rubles. (C) 750 rubles. (D) 1,000 rubles.

50. What does "picking up on" mean in Paragraph 4?

- (A) Laughing at. (B) Standing for. (C) Pointing out. (D) Forgetting about.
